On the margins of the LECTIO-conference 'Authority revisited' starting later that day, Prof. Brad Gregory (University of Notre Dame) will hold a masterclass on the history of Early Modern religion and theology. Prof. Gregory has agreed to discuss several papers as well as research proposals written by members of the departments of Early Modern history (Faculty of Arts) and History of Church and Theology (Faculty of Theology and Religious Studies).

The following papers/research proposals will be discussed:

Fr Benedict Fischer, The presence of Erasmus in the 1614 Pauline commentary of Cornelius a Lapide

Antonio Gerace, What is the Vulgate? Girolamo Seripando's hand-notes on the Vulgate

Alexander Soetaert, A French book in the Low Countries: Matthieu de Launoy's Déclaration et réfutation and its reissues in Douai and Cambrai (1578–9)

Aurelie van de Meulebroucke, Blame Luther. Academic networking, censorship and the international context of the condemnation of Martin Luther (1517–30)
